

Native Americans all over the United States are known for their different pot shapes, pottery styles, and baskets.

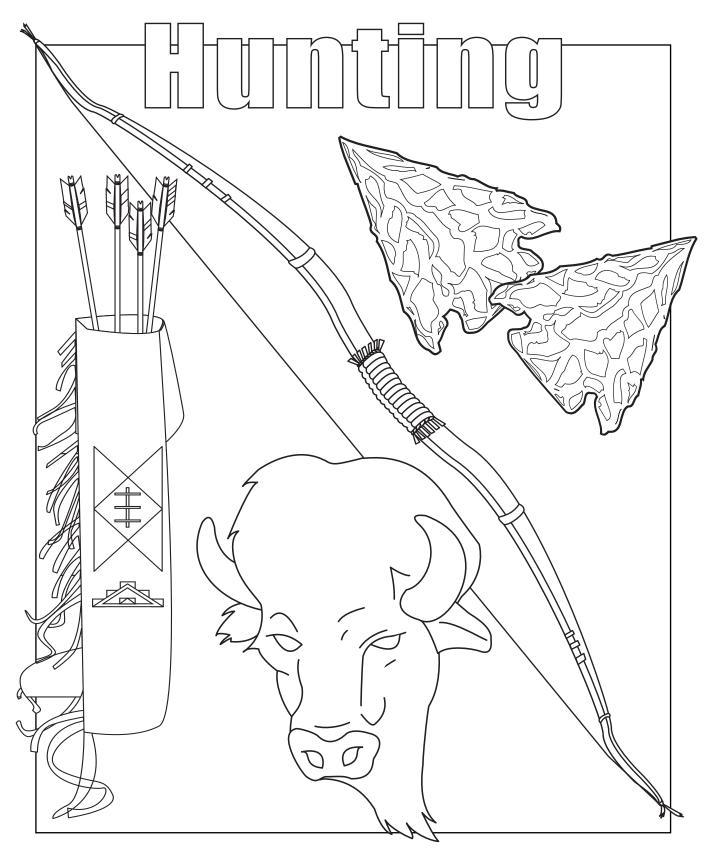

Nearly all Native Americans were forced or tricked into relocating to reservations. Two famous relocations were the Cherokee tribe's Trail of Tears and the Navajo's Long Walk.

Each tribe of American Indians used materials natural to their region to build their homes. These dwellings had to withstand the pressures of weather, disaster, and invaders.

When American Indians hunted animals, they tried not to waste anything. They used the meat for eating, skins for clothing, bones for tools, even sinews for bowstrings!